Dear Members

As mentioned in Page no 7 Para 4 of our attached report pertaining to Ramky, we have now received a formal response from Ramky (email attached) in relation to the National Company Law Tribunal ("NCLT") proceedings pending against Ramky Infrastructure Limited ("RIL"). Based on the responses received to our requisitions, we understand that there are 2 proceedings pending against RIL before NCLT and the financial liability arising from the pending NCLT proceedings is understood not to exceed INR 8,00,00,000 (Indian Rupees Eight Crores). RIL has informed that since RIL is major infrastructure company in India, such litigations are typically filed by contractors or vendors to create pressure on the company for recovery of monies owed to them, even after providing deficient services to the company, and RIL would prefer to contest these matters on merits unless the real need comes to settle the matter. Importantly, we note that both NCLT proceedings have been filed against RIL, which is the infrastructure arm of the Ramky group, and not against Ramky Estates and Farms Limited ("REFL"), the real estate entity proposed for the redevelopment.

With regard RERA matters, we have been given to understand that proceedings disclosed in Proforma E of the bid submission documents are frivolous in nature. Ramky developed the relevant project in 2 phases, and certain disputes arose between purchasers of both phases, resulting in RERA proceedings seeking compensation for delay in completion. However, Phase I was completed and handed over to the respective purchasers before the commencement of these RERA proceedings. We have also been informed that there are separate disputes between two purchaser groups, including a contested claim by one group regarding the authority of a society it claims to represent, along with several other issues between the two groups. Furthermore, REFL has continued to maintain the property since completion and has complied with all applicable statutory requirements and has represented its willingness to hand over maintenance to the association, together with a corpus fund, to enable the association to continue maintenance independently. Relying on the representations set out above and in the attached email by Ramky, none of the pending litigations appear to adversely affect the capability of Ramky to undertake development of a project of this size and volume.

We understand that the NCLT litigations have been filed against RIL that is the infrastructure company of Ramky and not against the real estate company of Ramky i.e., REFL. We have not come across any NCLT proceedings against the real estate entity of Ramky. RIL has informed that since RIL is major infrastructure company in India, such litigations are typically filed by contractors or vendors to create pressure on the company for recovery of monies owed to them, even after providing deficient services to the company, and RIL would prefer to contest these matters on merits unless the real need comes to settle the matter.

2. RERA Matter

We have relied on the representations of Ramky that the RERA proceedings disclosed in the Performa E of bid submissions documents are frivolous in nature. Ramky was developing a real estate project in 2 (two) phases and certain disputes arose between the purchasers of both the phases and the RERA proceedings have been filed seeking compensation for delay in completion of the project, whereas Phase I is complete and handed over to the respective purchaser before commencement of RERA. We have also been represented that there are cases between 2 groups where 1 group claims to have an authorised society which is being contested by other group and several other issues between 2 groups. Furthermore, REFL has been maintaining the property since completion and complying with all the statutory requirements and they are willing to pass on the maintenance to association alongwith corpus fund so that the association can continue maintenance.

Relying upon the aforesaid representation none of litigations appear to adversely affect the implementation of re-development for Asmita Jyoti CHS in case of selection.

3. DISCLAIMER

We have traced the NCLT litigations online and have relied on the formal representations of RIL provided to us pursuant to its email dated 31 October 2026. This updated tracker is solely based on the responses to requisitions given by RIL. RIL being a listed entity, may not provide any false or misleading statements.
